Fowler to Lead Mid-Carolina's Workforce Development Efforts

Mid-Carolina Regional Council is pleased to announce that Matthew Fowler has been selected to serve as the Council's Director of Workforce & Talent Development.

Matthew currently serves as NCWorks Regional Operations Director for North Carolina's Sandhills Region. In this role, he oversees regional coordination of workforce services, develops regional partnerships with key stakeholders in the public and private sectors, and supervises all local career center managers to ensure effective service delivery. Mathew previously served as the NCWorks Career Center Manager for centers in Edenton and Elizabeth City, North Carolina.

Matthew has multiple years of management, service delivery, and program design experience. Specifically, Matthew is considered an expert in the integrated service delivery approach to workforce programs on both the regional and local level. Furthermore, he has a proven track record of facilitating the development of collaborative partnerships among various private sector, educational, economic development, and community stakeholders.

"We look forward to the leadership Matthew will bring the Council and to our region's workforce system. Matthew's leadership and knowledge is exactly what we need as we chart a new course for workforce development in Cumberland, Harnett, and Sampson Counties," said Justin Hembree, Mid-Carolina Regional Council Executive Director.

Matthew holds a Bachelor of Business in Business Security. He resides in Lillington, North Carolina. Matthew will begin his duties as Director of Workforce & Talent Development in mid-September.
